What is an Apprenticeship?

- An Apprenticeship is vocational training relevant to the learner's current employment.
- The learner not only gains an industry-recognised qualification but also soft skills such as communication and teamwork resulting in a well-rounded and efficient employee.
- Apprenticeships are delivered in the learner's workplace with minimal downtime and can be completed within a time period that's suitable to both the learner and the employer.

If you employ young people and would like them to gain an industry-recognised qualification while they work, that is government-funded, then get in touch and we can advise you on the most appropriate apprenticeships.

Or, if you would like to employ a young person as an apprentice, you can let us know if you have an opening and would like to use our free recruitment service to find your new apprentice.

"I would recommend Sixth Sense to everyone as they were able to find me the perfect apprenticeship, in the perfect job."
